Trail Food: Drying and Cooking Food for Backpacking and Paddling. This is the second trail cookbook that I've purchased. In contrast to the first one, this book is a lot easier to use. Rather than cooking up entire meals and then dehydrating them, the recipes in this book call for dehydrated ingredients, which you then mix with water on the trail and cook for your meal. This makes the dehydration process much faster and simpler. Keeping food weight down is a critical backpacking skill that usually takes experience to master. Most seasoned backpackers opt for lightweight, calorically dense foods that are very easy to prepare. With this mentality, ease and weight tend to trump nutritional value, which can sometimes lead to a heavily processed food bag. Another approach is to spend time and effort building nutritional value into your meals beforehand. This method involves preparing DIY dinner recipes, using a food dehydrator to make trail snacks, and being more willing to carry extra weight for highly nutritious, yet not
