An urban life on a global perspective is always coupled with well organised and qualified educational system compared to the rural side. A city would be a favourite place to find efficient schools, universities and research centres when weighed against a village side. On the contrary, rural lifestyle bestows one's closeness to nature and is free from the hazards of urbanisation. On the one hand, a group of people prefer to live in the city centre because they believe that there are a lot of benefits living in the area. It is a fact that the city offers various kinds of facilities, such as shopping malls, universities, cinemas, hospitals and restaurants, therefore it would not be difficult for the city's residents in finding education centres, foods or entertainments. How can governments make urban life better for everyone? Here are some band 7 vocabulary ideas from my ebook for describing city problems: Life in cities has its drawbacks. Life in cities can be extremely stressful. Hi, simon these are my ideas; 1. encourage residents in rural areas to continue living there by improving the infrastructure, sanitation, and transportation in those places. 2. provide different kinds of jobs in those areas to prevent people from moving to cities for seeking work. Contemporary cities are cities of today, but that does not always mean that the city is successful and well developed, the majority of contemporary cities have poverty-stricken areas and are in dire need of help, especially the youth. In these poor communities, poor living conditions are a major factor in why these places need help, they live in the middle of a city, but some have no running water. Therefore, the women throughout the show create a good visual to the audience on their different perspectives of sex, and make it pretty clear on their mindset that casual sex is acceptable;
