Immigration And Ethnicity: American Society--melting Pot Or salad Bowl

Michael D'Innocenzo Josef P Sirefman Hofstra University

The term melting pot was changed to salad bowl to reflect that immigrants from second and third generations would retain their heritage and resemble pieces in a mixed salad. Music, art and education reflected this movement to preserve heritage. God Bless America Source. While American citizens felt that immigrants contributed to American society with their diverse cultures, they also felt that assimilation was important. They felt that the constantly changing face of America was a positive force for the nation, but at the same time, unity in a common core was needed. I earlier commented on our Salad Bowl of ethnicities. I'm a little confused by the references to "immigrates" vs. "immigrants". Typo?
